Apple

Industry of the Ordinary

A cast glass apple, molded from a freshly bitten one.

THE WORK

A freshly bitten apple, cast in glass for the artist collective Industry of the Ordinary and a private collector with a personal connection to the artists. It holds a single moment.

THE MATERIAL QUESTION

An apple browns in minutes. The bite had to be captured before the moment was gone.

THE MAKING

The day was scheduled like an organ transplant. The bite was taken with the collector, the apple went straight into a bag and across the city to the studio, where a flask sized to it and the rubber were ready to pour. There was almost no browning. The teeth marks look as if they just happened, and the mold smelled of fresh apple.

IN PLACE

We worked with Industry of the Ordinary again a few months later, on Palimpsest at the Driehaus Museum.
